Francis Price, of Charlotte, North Carolina, an investment banker, son-in-law of Nick Carter, came to see me this morning.

I attended the monthly meeting of the Latin American Ambassadors at the Ecuadorean Embassy, Basil Mansions. The Moral Rearmament people seem to have been lately engaging in a concerted drive to enlist the interest of my colleagues. Several of them complained that they were called on at their homes at nine in the morning, and as late as ten at night, by doorbell pushers who wanted to expound the merits of the Moral Rearmament organization.

Lunched at Bucks. Don Kelly, a classmate of mine at Princeton, and his wife, called, as did Lester Markel of the New York Sunday Times. Stephen Brown came in to say goodbye. He is retiring on May 31.

Eric Johnston, with his English manager, Mr. Thornton, came to see me.

Tonight, we had cocktails for

Philip Reed (Honorary Chairman, General Electric)
W. J. Carter (Carter Mills)
Mr. and Mrs. Sekers (Musical Philanthropist)
Mrs. Hamilton (Harpers Bazaar)
Mr. and Mrs. Chotzinoff (NBC music director)
